

Abstracts

Apparatus and methods of providing rate control at a user access point of an edge network node of a packet switched communications network are described. Rate control mechanisms are presented in respect of both ingress and egress rate control with 5 quality of service support. Multiple thresholds associated with a single leaky bucket per traffic flow direction enable the mechanism to selectively control traffic rates based on a traffic class priority criteria.